

Other Income and SSI Benefits

SSI is a cash benefit paid to children & adults with disabilities and Elders age 65 and up.

SSI eligibility and payment amounts are based on financial need. The income and assets of the person who gets SSI, their spouse, and their parents may count.

People who receive SSI need to report all of these types of income, even if the money is received by a spouse or the parent of a child under 18:

- Wages
- Child support
- Unemployment
- Self-employment
- Cash gifts
- Pensions
- Lottery winnings
- Gambling wins
- Per capita & Tribal General Welfare

Report income by the 6th of the month, or as soon as possible.

Social Security does not count all of an SSI recipient's income against their SSI payment. It is always best to report everything to SSA. The SSA office can tell you if your income is excludable, and how much of it will affect your SSI payment.

percap

Note: For the purpose of percap if an Elder is working while on SS Retirement, percap will affect how much they are allowed to earn. Only people in full retirement (67 years +) are fully exempt from deductions.
